

Oregon State University Extension Forestry Program
Forests & Forestry: Making Contact

The Program

Oregon State University’s Extension Forestry Program, through education and applied research, strives to improve Oregonians’ knowledge of forest resources and their options for expanding benefits from these resources. The program assists woodland owners, forestry professionals, forest industry, loggers, forest workers, and the general public in understanding forest management and utilization via a network of campus- and county-based faculty.

The Forestry Program is one of six that comprise the Oregon State University Extension Service. Our mission is to provide objective education and information to Oregonians solve problems, develop skills, and manage resources related to youth, family, community, farm, forest, energy, and marine resources. We carry out this mission by extending the research knowledge base of the university to people who need the information, and provide leadership in applying this knowledge to problems that people have identified.
